

This month marks the 250th birthday of the United States. As I reflect on this milestone, I am filled with gratitude for the freedoms, opportunities, and hope that I am privileged to enjoy as a citizen of this country. While this achievement is worth celebrating, I also see warning signs of how far the nation has strayed from its Christian roots. Although families in crisis have always existed, the need for strong, healthy families has never been more critical than it is today.

Today, many families face unprecedented challenges, and the Christian values that once anchored them are increasingly under pressure. Economic hardships, social pressures, and mental health struggles can erode principles like love, forgiveness, and faith. As these values diminish, relationships weaken, and hope can fade. However, the hope rooted in Christ offers renewal and restoration, guiding families back to the love and truth of the Gospel.

That is why meeting families in crisis begins with reminding them that they are not alone. As we listen and guide them and are supported by you through your prayers and sacrificial giving, we demonstrate love modeled by Jesus who paid the ultimate price so that we can overcome anything life throws our way by His power. How beautiful is Isaiah 41:10:

"So do not fear, for I am with you; do not be dismayed, for I am your God. I will strengthen you and help you; I will uphold you with my righteous right hand."

I am truly grateful for your support as we work together to strengthen our country by raising children in families rooted in love and built on God's unwavering faithfulness.

In Christ,
